

JOURNEY TO THE MOON

On a summer Sunday in 1968, two American pilots climbed down a ladder. They stepped out on the dusty, gray soil and instantly became the most famous men alive—they were walking on the Moon.

Back on Earth, TV viewers watched with thrilled anticipation as the first steps in history unfolded. The journey to the Moon had seemed an impossible challenge. To get there, American engineers had designed a machine more complex and costly than any man had ever built and blasted it into space at the top of an enormous, boiling, fiery rocket.

It was an astonishing achievement—a moment that nobody who watched it could ever forget. Yet for countless hours afterward, Neil Alden, and Michael Collins, it was much more than that. It was a dangerous, dramatic adventure.

This is the story behind that adventure.
