The Era of Transitional Justice Paul Gready, 2010-10-18 The Era of Transitional Justice explores a broad set of issues raised by political transition and transitional justice through the prism of the South African TRC. South Africa constitutes a powerful case study of the enduring structural legacies of a troubled past and of both the potential and limitations of transitional justice and human rights as agents of transformation in the contemporary era. South Africa's story has wider relevance because it helped to launch constitutional human rights and transitional justice as global discourses as such its own legacy is to some extent writ large in post-authoritarian and post-conflict contexts across the world. Based on a decade of research and in an analysis that is both comparative and interdisciplinary, Paul Gready maintains that transitional justice needs to do more to address structural violence and in particular poverty, inequality and social and criminal violence as these have emerged as stubborn legacies from an oppressive or war-torn past in many parts of the world. Organised around four central themes: new keyword conceptualisation, truth, justice, reconciliation, re-imagining human rights, engaging with the past and present, remaking the public sphere it is an argument that will be of considerable relevance to those interested in the law and politics of transitional societies

Methods of Human Rights Research Fons Coomans, Fred Grünfeld, Menno T. Kamminga, 2009 In academic human rights research especially legal human rights research little attention tends to be devoted to questions of methodology One reason for this may be that human rights scholars often are former human rights activists Dispensing with methodological niceties enables them to engage in wishful thinking and to come up with the conclusions they were hoping to find in the first place Furthermore although much emphasis continues to be put on the need to carry out human rights research from a multidisciplinary perspective the methods to be applied in such research remain far from clear Which criteria can be identified to qualify a piece of human rights research as a methodologically sound piece of work Are there aspects and considerations that are typical for human rights research What are good practices in human rights research The book addresses these questions from the perspective of different scholarly fields relevant for human rights research law including international law and criminal law social sciences including criminology political science comparative politics international relations and anthropology and philosophy and history the humanities This book is essential reading for any Ph D candidate embarking on a dissertation in the field of human rights and any human rights scholar wishing to critically reflect on the quality of her his own methods of work
