My Personal Glitch Experiences During Recovery From A Brain Injury:

My Personal Glitch Tommy Beel, 2011-04-28 Imagine how devastated you would be if suddenly you were unable to walk talk or do many of the things you previously did Tommy Beel grew up in Jamaica where he attended the University of the West Indies completed his undergraduate studies at Tuskegee University in Alabama and then went to Auburn Graduate School at Auburn University also in Alabama After that he went to work at the University of Alberta in Canada It was while he was there that he suffered a brain injury He was stricken with a brain injury at age 32 It kept him in three hospitals for 27 months straight including time spent in two rehabilitation hospitals For three months he was totally unable to walk talk or use a pen or pencil because of motor skills difficulties Fortunately his setbacks were not permanent Today he has regained these skills only with aggressive therapies determination and the passage of time He regained his ability to walk in months but his balance was still compromised He was able to walk only if someone else walked with him and provided the stability that is needed for walking As a result for a number of years after his brain injury occurred he depended on a wheelchair to get around Tommy paints an experiential picture of the different stages of having a brain injury That is from having a stroke which caused the brain injury to the various forms of therapy then recovery He shares experiences on being in hospitals and compares it with staying in a group home Throughout this experience he looks back at the nature of interactions that he had with people along the way Some of these people were cognitively affected by their brain injuries He looks generally at the inconveniences of having a brain injury Ironically having a brain injury helped Tommy to establish a writing career The hospital psychologist encouraged him to tell his story in a book In My Personal Glitch he shares the experiences regarding his brain injury
