Justifying Digital Repression via "Fighting Fake News" SOC052000, Dien Nguyen An Luong, 2022-08-04 Southeast Asian autocracies of Cambodia Myanmar Thailand and Vietnam have politicized vague definitions of fake news to justify diverse tactics of digital repression In these countries what constitutes falseness in fake news has hardly been clearly articulated The governments instead focus on the grave threats the dissemination of fake news could pose to national security public disorder or national prestige As the governments are vested with the power to bend the labelling of fake news to their will they can criminalize those accused of circulating such information to safeguard public interests There are at least four methods by which the governments have tightened the screws on cyberspace under the banner of curbing fake news i prosecute Internet users journalists and dissidents in particular ii pressure Internet Service Providers and social media platforms to block and remove content iii expand and deepen social media monitoring and iv shut down the Internet altogether All four countries have used fake news allegations to penalize critics Cambodia Thailand and Vietnam are inclined to use such allegations to strong arm tech companies into removing content at the behest of the governments Thailand and Vietnam tend to exploit such allegations to beef up online surveillance Myanmar is the only country that turns to Internet shutdowns The interplay between the methods of digital repression that exploit the pretext of cracking down on fake news and the manipulation of online discourse through the deployment of cyber troops would merit further research and in depth examination
