

MYTH

FACT

Talking about suicide might give someone the idea to attempt it.

Suicide is a selfish act.

Suicide can't be prevented.

Only people with mental health disorders attempt suicide.

Once someone is suicidal, they will always be suicidal.

People who make suicide attempts are just seeking attention.

People who attempt and survive won't try again.

There is nothing I can do to help someone who is suicidal.

Discussing suicide openly can help save lives, as it provides an opportunity to address underlying issues and connect individuals to support services

People who die by suicide often believe their existence causes others pain, and they see ending their lives as a selfless act to spare loved ones from further distress.

Recognizing warning signs, providing support, and connecting individuals to professional help can prevent suicide in many cases.

While mental health conditions can contribute to suicidal ideation, not all people who die by suicide have a diagnosed mental illness. Life events and stressors also play a role.

Suicide attempts are often a response to overwhelming stressors or situations. With support and coping strategies, people can overcome suicidal thoughts and go on to live fulfilling lives.

Attempting suicide is a serious issue and should not be dismissed as attention-seeking behavior. It is crucial to validate the person and provide support.

A person who has attempted suicide once is at a higher risk of attempting it again. Ongoing support and mental health care are essential in reducing the risk of future attempts.

By reaching out, showing empathy, and connecting individuals to support services, friends, family and colleagues can make a significant difference in preventing suicide
