

Metals in Aqueous Solutions Simulations

How to use it:

Some elements are more reactive than others, meaning that they are more likely to form compounds than to be found in their pure elemental or "free" form. Other elements are less reactive and more likely to be found as pure elements, not in a compound. This simulation will allow you to test various combinations of elements and compounds, to see a list of elements in order from most reactive to least reactive, or to find out an activity series. More reactive elements will replace less reactive elements in a compound given the opportunity to react. Less reactive elements will remain in pure elements and will not react with compounds containing more reactive elements.

Objectives:

Use the results of the simulation program to determine the activity series for the elements using this simulation.

Procedure:

First, the simulation at: <https://chemistry.mhhe.com/chem101/experiments/10/experiments10.html> and complete parts of the FOGP, sections Activity 5.1 and the Observation section, recording the appropriate information and answering the questions below.

The screenshot shows a web-based simulation titled "Metals in Aqueous Solutions". The interface is split into two main columns. The left column contains the title, a brief description "Investigate the activity series of metals.", and a green "Start" button. The right column is divided into two sub-sections: "Initial Solution" and "Final Solution". Each sub-section contains five beakers, each with a colored liquid and a list of metals (Al, Zn, Fe, Ni, Cu) to be tested. The "Initial Solution" section shows the starting state of the beakers, while the "Final Solution" section is currently empty, indicating where the results of the simulation will be displayed.
