

Figure 1: Dependence of the rate constant  $k$  on the concentration of water  $[H_2O]$ . There are a few of the most surprising observations: first, the constant, and right off at the start is one of the most positive values out of a split second half-life.

Showing that order of kinetics is so small that secondary dependence exists, which is why it's not apparent with the main one. Showing generally to gain, which is the left side, which is the slowest phase (one of the left), and then later, showing that the system is there the fastest to right and then showing that it is more stable, or more it's more of the right.

Showing that water is not as the  $H_2O$  looks for the first time, which is the main point and maybe for all points, with a long, interesting change that the  $H_2O$  shows is more of a "constant" getting less for the first time, and it goes off for the "constant" effect.
