

LAB #12 - Origin of the Hawaiian Islands

Objectives: To graphically compare the age of the islands of Hawaii and seamounts (underwater mountains) by plotting data points; to infer the location of the mantle hot spot; to determine the direction and rate of movement of the Pacific Plate by using the rate of change formula and developing connections to the maps via conclusion questions.

Introduction: The Hawaiian islands were created as the Pacific Plate traveled over a hot spot in the mantle. Where molten rock (or magma) rises from deep below Earth's surface, the result is a hot spot, or the site of volcanic activity.

Procedure A: Place an X next to each task after you have completed it:

1. _____ Using the information in Data Table 1 below, arrange the islands from oldest to youngest in Data Table 1A. Include their longitude in the data table
2. _____ After completing Data Table 1A infer the approximate age of "Nihoa" based on the trend of your new data table and write it there.
3. _____ Complete the stop and jot based on what you observe in your Data Table 1A
