During the 1980s, the American Medical Association (AMA) was leading this work. The AMA's Physician Computerized Billing is a comprehensive thinking-out-aloud document on physicians' computerization. One of the bills within Physician Computerized Billing is "The Joint Health Insurance Industry Initiative to Automate Billing" (1984). The word computerized in the title underlines the fact that, in the AMA's view, the computer had a more important role than the physician in automating physicians' business. However, this document was flawed. One of the main flaws was that, while physicians were participating in the computerization of their business, what was left out of the picture was the fact that the computer was not the only factor in the process. The AMA's Physician Computerized Billing was a good start, but it was not the end of the story. The AMA's Physician Computerized Billing was a good start, but it was not the end of the story. The AMA's Physician Computerized Billing was a good start, but it was not the end of the story.
