What is Metabolic Syndrome?

- Metabolic syndrome describes a common condition in which obesity, high blood glucose ("blood sugar"), high blood pressure, and an abnormal cholesterol profile (dyslipidemia) cluster together in one person.
- When these risk factors occur together, the chance of - developing coronary heart disease, stroke, and diabetes is much greater than when these risk factors develop independently.

- According to the American Heart Association, almost 20% of Americans are affected by metabolic syndrome.

Metabolic Syndrome Risk Factors

To be diagnosed with metabolic syndrome, patients need to have at least three of the following risk factors:

Obesity

- Obesity is defined as having too much body fat.
- A person is considered obese when his/her weight is 30% or more above ideal weight.
- Obesity promotes insulin resistance, an inability to respond normally to insulin.
- People with fat situated mainly around the - stomach (abdomen) are considered "apple-shaped" and have a higher risk of many of the serious conditions associated with metabolic syndrome.

- Ask your healthcare provider what your ideal weight should be.

Metabolic Syndrome Risk Factor:

Waist measurement greater than 35 inches (men) or 40 inches (women)

High Blood Glucose

- Sugar (glucose) is what supplies the body with energy.
- Normally, this sugar (glucose) is rapidly cleared from the blood and stored as energy, but if sugar stays in the blood it causes an unhealthy build-up called high blood glucose.
- Glucose in the blood reaches

- all of the body's organs and systems, including the heart, arteries and veins, kidneys, and nervous system.
- This constant "sugar attack" has the same effect as eating too much candy and not brushing your teeth—it causes organ system damage or dysfunction.
- People with high blood glucose are at risk for many diseases, including heart attack, stroke, blindness, and amputation.
- High blood-glucose levels (or pre-diabetes) often leads to the development of type 2 diabetes.

Metabolic Syndrome Risk Factor:

Glucose of at least 110 mg/dL or greater

High Blood Pressure

- Blood pressure is the force that helps the blood flow through the blood vessels.
- Blood vessels that are subjected to high blood pressure for an extended period of time thicken and become less flexible, causing arteriosclerosis affecting the supply of blood to the heart.
- Blood pressure is measured using two numbers:

- Systolic pressure is measured just after the heart contracts and the pressure is greatest.
- Diastolic pressure is measured when the heart relaxes and the pressure is lowest.
- Normal blood pressure is about 110/75 mmHg. High blood pressure alone causes no symptoms, but it does increase the risk of heart attack, stroke, and kidney failure.

Metabolic Syndrome Risk Factor:

Blood pressure greater than 130/80 mmHg

Abnormal Cholesterol Profile (Dyslipidemia)

- Cholesterol is a type of fat in your blood.
- Cholesterol either comes from the foods you eat or is made by your liver and is found in all of the body's cells.
- Triglycerides and LDL are considered bad cholesterol.

- HDL is a good cholesterol.
- Too much bad cholesterol and not enough good cholesterol increase the risk for coronary heart disease and is an important indicator of metabolic syndrome.

Triglycerides

High triglyceride levels in the blood can help clog the arteries with fatty deposits called plaque (atherosclerosis), making it difficult for oxygen-rich blood to reach the heart. High triglyceride levels increase your risk of having a heart attack.

Metabolic Syndrome Risk Factor:

Triglyceride level greater than 150 mg/dL

HDL Cholesterol

HDL cholesterol (the "good" cholesterol) helps remove deposits from within the blood vessels and it keeps the blood vessels from becoming blocked. The more HDL in your blood, the better it is for your heart. When HDL cholesterol levels are low, there is a greater risk of developing a heart attack or stroke.

Metabolic Syndrome Risk Factor:

HDL cholesterol level less than 50 mg/dL (men) and less than 40 mg/dL (women)

Medical Conditions Associated with Metabolic Syndrome

People with untreated metabolic syndrome are at a higher risk of cardiovascular disease (such as coronary heart disease and stroke) and type 2 diabetes.

Stroke

The term stroke refers to the sudden death of brain tissue caused by a lack of oxygen to the brain. In ischemic stroke, blood flow to an area of the brain is either blocked or reduced. This blockage may result from atherosclerosis and blood clot formation.

Coronary Heart Disease

Narrowing of the arteries in the heart usually causes coronary heart disease, which can lead to heart attacks. The build-up of plaque in the lining of the arteries, atherosclerosis, can cause this narrowing. All of the metabolic syndrome risk factors can result in atherosclerosis, heart attacks occur when blood cannot flow through the clogged arteries. As a result, the heart does not get enough oxygen and stops working.

Type 2 Diabetes

Type 2 diabetes is a disease in which the pancreas produces little or no insulin and/or the body loses the ability to respond normally to insulin (insulin resistance). Insulin is needed to transport glucose into the cells for use as energy. Without insulin, body tissues have less access to essential nutrients for energy and storage. Without proper management, diabetes can lead to complications that affect the eyes, mouth, cardiovascular system, kidneys, nerves, and extremities.

How is Metabolic Syndrome Treated?

Metabolic syndrome is a disease that requires long-term management of each of the risk factors. Poor nutrition, and lack of exercise are underlying causes of these risk factors. It has been shown that with lifestyle changes and treatment, including medications, people with metabolic syndrome can greatly decrease their chances of developing serious complications. Regular monitoring of blood pressure, cholesterol, and glucose are important to detect the syndrome.

Treatment options usually include the following:

- Weight loss—If you are obese, a weight loss of 10 to 15% of your body weight can help your body regain its ability to recognize insulin.
- Exercise—Increased activity increases insulin resistance. It also helps lower blood pressure, lower "bad" cholesterol levels, raise "good" cholesterol levels, and reduce the risk of developing type 2 diabetes.
- Eat a heart healthy diet—Reduce saturated fat, processed foods, salt, white flour, potatoes, and rice. Include two servings of fruit per day, more greens, vegetables, fat free dairy, lean protein, and whole grains.
