Metals and Neurodegeneration: Restoring the Balance Anthony R. White,Katja M. Kanninen,Peter J. Crouch,2016-02-02 Biometals such as copper zinc and iron have key biological functions however aberrant metabolism can lead to detrimental effects on cell function and survival These biometals have important roles in the brain driving cellular respiration antioxidant activity intracellular signaling and many additional structural and enzymatic functions There is now considerable evidence that abnormal biometal homeostasis is a key feature of many neurodegenerative diseases and may have an important role in the onset and progression of disorders such as Alzheimer s Parkinson s prion and motor neuron diseases Recent studies also support biometal roles in a number of less common neurodegenerative disorders The role of biometals in a growing list of brain disorders is supported by evidence from a wide range of sources including molecular genetics biochemical studies and biometal imaging These studies have spurred a growing interest in understanding the role of biometals in brain function and disease as well as the development of therapeutic approaches that may be able to restore the altered biometal chemistry of the brain These approaches range from genetic manipulation of biometal transport to chelation of excess metals or delivery of metals where levels are deficient A number of these approaches are offering promising results in cellular and animal models of neurodegeneration with successful translation to pre clinical and clinical trials At a time of aging populations and slow progress in development of neurotherapeutics to treat age related neurodegenerative diseases there is now a critical need to further our understanding of biometals in neurodegeneration This issue covers a broad range of topics related to biometals and their role in neurodegeneration It is hoped that this will inspire greater discussion and exchange of ideas in this crucial area of research and lead to positive outcomes for sufferers of these neurodegenerative diseases

Metal Ions and Neurodegenerative Disorders Paolo Zatta, 2003 Numerous studies have established a clear connection between neuronal oxidative stress and several neurodegenerative diseases with consequential damages to lipids proteins nucleic acids etc In addition several modifications indicative of oxidative stress have been described in association with neurons neurofibrillary tangles and senile plaques in Alzheimer's disease including advanced glycation end products and free carbonyl oxidation Oxidative damage and antioxidant responses are now well characterized but sources of damaging free radicals are yet to be fully understood Evidences of alteration in metal ions metabolism have been reported in various diseases like Alzheimer's Wilson Menkes Prion Pick Huntington disease epilepsy and other pathological events Thus metal ions play a pivotal role in neurodegenerative phenomena Chelation therapy is still in the early days of its development but research in this area could lead to new products that could revolutionize treatment Two international conferences on OC Metals and the Brain From Neurochemistry to Neurodegeneration OCO Padova Italy 2000 and Fez Morocco 2002 were recently held to discuss the role of metal ions in neurophysiopathology A third will be held in 2005 in Johannesburg South Africa This book follows the same train of thought as those conferences in order to highlight the unquestionable importance of metal ions in the research on the neurophysiopathology of neurodegenerative diseases The excellent reputation of the scientists who have contributed to this project ensures the quality of the chapters presented here and hopefully this will help spur new research initiatives in the field which is still in its infancy

Neurobiology of the Trace Elements Ivor E. Dreosti, Richard M. Smith, 1983-10-31 F Macfarlane Burnet I have been an interested onlooker for many years at research on the biology of trace elements particularly in its bearing on the pastoral and agricultural importance of copper zinc cobalt and molybdenum deficiencies in the soil of various parts of Australia More recently I have developed a rather more specific interest in the role of zinc particularly in relation to the dominance of zinc metalloenzymes in the processes of DNA replication and repair and its possible significance for human pathology One area of special significance is the striking effect of zinc deficiency in the mother in producing congenital abnormalities in the fetus The fact that several chapters in the present work are concerned with this and other aspects of zinc deficiency is I fancy the editors justification for inviting me to write this foreword In reading several of the chapters before publication my main impression was of the great potential importance of the topic of trace metal biology in both its negative and positive aspects the effects of deficiency of essential elements and the toxicity of such pollutants of the modern world as lead or mercury mainly as organic compounds
