In Muted Modernists: The Struggle Over Divine Politics in Saudi Arabia, Madawi Al-Rasheed challenges monolithic understandings of official and opposition divine politics in Saudi Arabia by examining how activists, intellectuals and religious scholars are attempting to construct a new form of politics through reinterpretation of key Islamic texts and civil society activism. This is an important and insightful read that contributes to scholarship on changing socio-political and cultural dynamics within the Middle East and the influence of media and communication technologies on political participation, writes Philip Effiom Ephraim.

Global events in 2016 are indicative of rapidly rising suspicion towards Muslims and Arabs in general worldwide. The closure of borders to refugees in Europe, the threat to close borders to all Muslims by a key US presidential candidate, the BREXIT referendum and the Brussels and Istanbul bombings are among the different events that have been directly linked to jihadist terrorist activities, and have served to worsen fear and suspicion. Terrorist attacks cause widespread anger and, in response, the general public can tend to overgeneralise by linking all Muslims with terrorists and other perpetrators of violent acts. Fingers often particularly point to Saudi Arabia as the mastermind and main sponsor of terrorism. In several cases, reprisal attacks on innocent members of Saudi communities in the west have followed, as witnessed during the aftermath of the 9/11 attacks in the US.

The framing of news and television programming on terrorist attacks, and indeed life in the Arab world, by the majority of western media often further aggravates the situation. Western media typically projects stereotypical images of Saudis as violent bigots, sectarian fanatics, misogynistic preachers and as socially conservative. While some aspects of these reports are factual, they often lack balance as counter-narratives on the struggles for freedom and democracy within the Arab world remain largely absent. Muslims thus tend to be lumped together as commonly seeking to establish an Islamic state where sharia law and Islamic moral codes prevail.

In Muted Modernists: The Struggle Over Divine Politics in Saudi Arabia, Madawi Al-Rasheed turns our attention to events in a country widely regarded as the seat of Islam. Al-Rasheed critically examines conflicting socio-cultural and political power relations between traditional-fundamentalist Islamists and those termed modernists. Modernists – comprising socio-political activists, intellectuals and ulama (religious scholars) – are attempting to rethink Islamic norms and reinterpret foundational Islamic texts with a view to aligning them with both the spirit of Islam and the sensibilities of modern society. The modernists call for a rational assessment of Islamic history and the adoption of contemporary perspectives and strategies to allow for greater freedom and political representation. By holding these counter-perspectives, modernist thinkers are directly pitched against state ideologies.
