PATIENT EDUCATION | INFORMATION SERIES

Mechanical Ventilation

Mechanical ventilation is a form of life support. A mechanical ventilator is a machine that takes over the work of breathing when a person is not able to breathe enough on their own. The mechanical ventilator is also called a ventilator, respirator, or breathing machine. There are many reasons why a patient may need a ventilator, but low oxygen levels or severe shortness of breath from an infection such as pneumonia are the most common reasons.

Why are ventilators used?

- To deliver high concentrations of oxygen into the lungs.
- To help get rid of carbon dioxide.
- To decrease the amount of energy a patient uses or breathing so that they can concentrate on fighting infection or recovering.
- To breathe for a person who has breathing problems of injury to the lungs, weakness, the brain or spinal cord, or who has very weak muscles.
- To breathe for a person who is unconscious because of a severe infection, build-up of mucus, or drug overdose.

How does a ventilator work?

When a person needs to be on a ventilator, a healthcare provider will insert a small tube into the patient's nose or mouth and into their windpipe (trachea). The tube is then connected to the ventilator. The ventilator pushes and pulls air into and out of the patient's lungs to get oxygen into the lungs. The ventilator can also hold a constant amount of the pressure, called positive end expiratory pressure (PEEP), in order to keep the air sacs in the lung from collapsing. The constant PEEP also allows doctors and nurses to remove mucus from the windpipe by suction.

Patients have a dialysis in the trachea, just as there is a hole in the ventilator for a long period of time. The dialysis is used to remove mucus from the lungs.

How are patients on ventilators monitored?

Most patients on a ventilator are monitored with an ICU. A person on a ventilator in an ICU setting will be hooked up to a machine that takes care of heart rate, oxygenation rate, blood pressure, and oxygen saturation (SpO2). Other tests that may be done include chest x-rays and blood tests to measure oxygen and carbon dioxide ("blood gases"). Members of the health care team including doctors, nurses, respiratory therapists will use this information to make the patient's status and make adjustments to the ventilator if necessary.

How long is a ventilator used?

A ventilator can't be life saving, but it can be life saving. It doesn't fix the problem that led to the person needing the ventilator in the first place, it just helps support a person until other treatments become effective, or the person gets better on their own. The health care team checks how long a person gets off the ventilator on the patient's condition. "Weaning" refers to the process of getting the person off the ventilator. Some patients may be on a ventilator for only a few hours or days, while others may require the ventilator for longer. How long a patient needs to be on a ventilator depends on many factors. These can include overall strength, how well the lungs were before going on the ventilator, and how many other organs are affected by the illness, heart and kidneys. Some people never require enough to be taken off the ventilator.
