Contemporary Perspectives on Research in Motivation in Early Childhood Education Olivia Saracho, 2019-03-01. Researchers from different disciplines, e.g., physiological, psychological, philosophical, have investigated motivation using multiple approaches. For example, in physiology, the scientific study of the normal function in living systems such as biology, researchers may use electrical and chemical stimulation of the brain, the recording of electrical brain wave activity with the electroencephalograph, and lesion techniques where a portion of the brain, usually of a laboratory animal, is destroyed and subsequent changes in motivation are noted. Petri Cofer, 2017. Physiological studies, mainly conducted with animals other than humans, have revealed the significance of particular brain structures in the control of fundamental motives such as hunger, thirst, sex, aggression, and fear. In psychology, researchers may study the individual's behaviors to understand their actions. In sociology, researchers may examine how individual interactions influence their behavior. For instance, in the classroom, students and teachers behave in expected ways which may differ when they are outside the classroom. Saracho, 2003, examined the student's academic achievement when they matched or mismatched their teacher's way of thinking. She identified both the teacher's and student's individual differences and defined consistencies in their cognitive processes. In philosophy, researchers can study the individual's theoretical position such as supporting Maslow's 1943 concept that motivation can create behaviors that augment motivation in the future. Abraham H. Maslow's theory of self-actualization supports this theoretical position. Petri Cofer, 2017. These areas and others are represented in this volume. This volume is devoted to understanding mutual and contemporary themes in the individual's motivation and its relationship to cognition. The current literature covers several methods to the multifaceted relationships between motivational and cognitive processes. Comprehensive reviews of the literature focus on prominent cognitive perspectives on motivation with young children, which includes ages from birth to eight years of age. The chapters in this special volume review and critically analyze the literature on several aspects of the relationships between motivational and cognitive processes and demonstrate the breadth and theoretical effectiveness of this domain. This brief introduction acknowledges the valuable contributions of these chapters to the study of human motivation This volume can be a valuable tool to researchers who are conducting studies in the motivation field It focuses on important contemporary issues on motivation in early childhood education ages 0 to 8 to provide the information necessary to make judgments about these issues It also motivates and guides researchers to explore gaps in the motivation literature Motivational Interviewing with Offenders Jill D.
