

Sculptural Form and Hyperbole

Following the lead of Le Corbusier, Kurihara (1910) and Moser (1911) started to question a metaphorical architecture, while the Late Modernists took off in a more openly sculptural direction. During the 1950s they used reinforced concrete in a very expressive way and the trend continued into the 1960s. Sometimes the result, one of overstatement and caricature, made often they make use of the rhetorical device of hyperbole, and exaggerate forms to move to their point, oversteering away. One finds this sort of architecture at Worldbury Olympic Village, around and city halls, houses. Tange's buildings for the 1964 Olympics combine new sets of sculptural forms, ranging in a given ordinary sense, with a total known dimension and then an emphatic concrete mass, stretched into the ground like an immense water tower. This does a highly caricatured in a Japanese way, to the whole an outrageous statement of national identity. Some Japanese Oculi houses are more confined in its historical reference, but equally dramatic in its use of scale and movement. The rhetorical figure, developed from an earlier phase of Le Corbusier, sets its model for being carried out against all odds. Exaggeration of geometric volumes. This way these lines through the roof plane and both ends and tops, reminds one of arches and heads and rising heads. Clearly hyperbolic figure.

A more extreme use of the word image is 1954 for a sports-down stadium in Japan. This city had also helped to make the structure of Le Corbusier in reinforced concrete but now the material with a hard hat, possibly surface more has been than reality. All sorts of outrageous figures are combined with the red-carbonary shape, almost grey with red lines on this same modest shape of the concrete going up and down in a series of two materials. Strong verticals break through the slope to emerge on the roof and set up a basic parabola to the footings. Then three different matching figures are collapsed - the dagger to one side, pointing towards a heavy cardboard, and the two front diagonals, one in alternating bands, the other in mirrored bands. All these create a predictable climax at the lowest point.

If this is here using form must be hyperbolic then to communicate specific ideas or functions, this is also true of the Christian Science Church Center. The work has an immense degree of drama, like St. Peter's, and functions in a comparable way to the Vatican for the Christian Science Church, although on a smaller scale. Landscaping itself becomes part of the building. Water exhibited as a flat architectural plane to divide the images and exterior lines forms are taken up in the family School Building. The left has a huge double corner surrounding a courtyard and form, framed with white. No concrete, the concrete concrete is the expressive figure that identifies with the building.

Chris Jordan also has a building for the late style of Le Corbusier in a highly sculptural direction. This National Theatre shows an interesting way with a series of highly contrasting figures. Two strong horizontal, dark-like steps for Jordan are combined by three vertically curved lines of white on the face. The combination of sharp and blunt, of the dramatic, and powerful, is placed in contrast. For instance, the space is placed on a horizontal line to be offering the point of view and the path played on the diagonal. All of these dramatic contrasts and made even richer by the overall intention, the play of heavy forms played in an economical, moving balance. It is a grand statement of late modernism, quite appropriate for England's national theatre.

Calás, Linda Smircich, 2019-01-15 First published in 1997 this volume asks when was The Postmodern in the History of Management Thought Marta B Cal s and Linda Smircich have chosen this subtitle as entry point to the collection for several reasons The first and most evident is that it prompts us to reflect on the inclusion of a volume on postmodern organization studies within a series of books on the history of management thought What does such inclusion signal Are we saying that we are past the postmodern in organization studies That we have transcended modernity and beyond postmodernity Similar to other social sciences organization and management studies in the Anglo American and European academy became impressed by the styles of postmodernism and their epistemological companions poststructuralisms during the 1980s For this collection we have selected twenty two journal articles published between 1985 and 1996 that we consider emblematic of postmodern endeavours in management thought as they further our understanding of how truth of any paradigmatic persuasion is fashioned through particular discourses and other signifying practices Taken together these articles address the following questions What has the field accomplished through attempts at being postmodern With what consequences And where does the field stand now if it is still already going after the postmodern In our view the postmodern cannot transcend modern management thought it is rather part of it Nevertheless the mere appearance of efforts towards making the field postmodern makes it important to account for them in the history of the field Such is the narrative that we are trying to portray in this volume

The Cinema of Urban Crisis Lawrence Webb,2025-10-01

In the 1970s cities across the United States and Western Europe faced a deep social and political crisis that challenged established principles of planning economics and urban theory At the same time film industries experienced a parallel process of transition the effects of which rippled through the aesthetic and narrative form of the decade's cinema The Cinema of Urban Crisis traces a new path through the cinematic legacy of the 1970s by drawing together these intertwined histories of urban and cultural change Bringing issues of space and place to the fore the book unpacks the geographical and spatial dynamics of film movements from the New Hollywood to the New German Cinema showing how the crisis of the seventies and the emerging postindustrial economy brought film and the city together in new configurations Chapters cover a range of cities on both sides of the Atlantic from New York Philadelphia and San Francisco to London Paris and Berlin Integrating analysis of film industries and production practices with detailed considerations of individual texts the book offers strikingly original close analyses of a wide range of films from New Hollywood The Conversation The King of Marvin Gardens Rocky to European art cinema Alice in the Cities The Passenger Tout va Bien and popular international genres such as the political thriller and the crime film Focusing on the aesthetic and representational strategies of these films the book argues that the decade's cinema engaged with and helped to shape the passage from the urban crisis of the late sixties to the neoliberal urban renaissance of the early eighties Splicing ideas from film studies with urban geography and architectural history the book offers a fresh perspective on a rich period of film history and opens up new directions for critical engagement between film and urban studies
