

INTEGRATED ALGEBRA

It is important to note that the data in Table 2 have been presented in an unadjusted form. In adjusted form the pattern of the relationship of the variables with the dependent variable changes.

[illegible]

Strong evidence for the hypothesis that the two types of effect complementation, that give rise to the "strong" type of complementation, are caused by a single mutation is provided by the fact that the two types of complementation are not observed in the same complementation group. The two types of complementation are observed in different complementation groups, and the two types of complementation are not observed in the same complementation group.
