

Methyl Bromide: The Green's Enemy

Greenhouse gases (GHGs) are pollutants resulting from human activities that cause global warming and sea level rise. One of the most significant GHGs is carbon dioxide (CO<sub>2</sub>), which is released into the atmosphere through the burning of fossil fuels. Other major GHGs include methane (CH<sub>4</sub>), nitrous oxide (N<sub>2</sub>O), and fluorinated gases (F-gases). F-gases are synthetic compounds that are used in a variety of industrial processes, including the production of refrigerants, air conditioning systems, and foam insulation. F-gases are particularly concerning because they have a much higher global warming potential (GWP) than CO<sub>2</sub>. For example, some F-gases have a GWP of 100 or more, meaning they can trap 100 or more times as much heat as CO<sub>2</sub> over a 100-year period. The Kyoto Protocol, an international treaty signed in 1997, aimed to reduce the emissions of GHGs. However, the United States withdrew from the treaty in 2001, and many other countries have failed to meet their commitments. As a result, the concentration of GHGs in the atmosphere continues to rise, leading to more frequent and severe weather events, rising sea levels, and other impacts on the environment.
