A black and white photograph of Miles Davis playing the trumpet. He is shown from the chest up, angled slightly to the left, with his head bowed and focused on his instrument. The lighting is dramatic, with a bright light source from the left creating a strong highlight on the trumpet's valves and the background, while the rest of the scene is in deep shadow. The trumpet is a Bb instrument, likely a flared bell model.

sources the studio outtakes and Wayne Shorter's Library of Congress composition deposits. Only recently made available, the outtakes throw the master takes into relief, revealing how the musicians and producer organized and edited the material to craft a unified artistic statement for each of these albums. The author's research into the Shorter archives proves to be of even broader significance and interest as Waters is able now to demonstrate the composer's original conception of a given piece. Waters also points out errors in the notated versions of the canonical songs as they often appear in the main sources available to musicians and scholars.
