Then glue the sets of four into sets of eight, but (not necessary) for every set of eight, hold out a set of four.

Figure 3-35: Half-rings made to be inserted and glued into rings of 16.

Glue the sets of eight to the sets of four to make half-rings of 12 segments each. Use an edge sander or file sander to sand the ends into the same plane, and hot glue the two half-rings of 12 into a full ring of 24.

Once the ring is glued together, you will notice that it will not be strong enough to be used as a glue surface. To solve this problem, run each ring through a drum thickness sander to smooth out the surfaces. You must use a "push stick" to keep the ring moving smoothly through the thickness sander because the ring is so small or dumpy; it will not span the distance between the infeed and outfeed rollers of the sander.

Figure 3-37: Apply drum-thickness sander to the ends of the ring to make the ends in the same plane.

No thickness sander? No problem! There is an easy solution to smooth out having a thickness sander. First, cut a plywood disc (beech block) about 61/2" in diameter and, using hot glue, glue the blank to the plywood. Try to glue the ring as close to "on-center" as possible.

Using green, attach a panel fence to the plywood waste block and mount the whole thing on your lathe.

Using a belt sander, flare off the ring to a flat surface. An added benefit is that you can also flare the blank round. This eliminates the need to hand sand it round. I often follow this up by sanding the face with a thickness block wrapped with abrasive paper. With one side flared off, repeat the process for the second side of the blank.

You can easily remove the ring from the plywood waste block by using a chisel at the glue line. You could also try using double-sided tape instead of the hot glue. This will work best if you use corn-based tape. Conserve this ring for all the rings you have glued up.

A better method would be to sand the two faces with a disc sander, although it will be too likely the faces will be parallel to each other, which will be important later when gluing off individual rings.
