

Isolated and desperate, a man woke up, the unbearable pain of near starvation gripping his torso. Every breath felt like daggers stabbing his side, and every swallow felt like sandpaper sliding down his throat. His mouth was dry and desolate, it tasted like blood. Through the windows of his room, the man stared into the water. The submarine was about 100 metres below the surface. The occasional tuna swam freely, only to be eaten by huge sawfish, the dominant predators down here. These sawfish were a new, extremely dangerous species only found in this chasm; a group of them had been circling the sub for two days.

The man weighed his options. The rations on the sub had nearly run out, and he was only getting small trays of mashed potatoes and water a couple of times every week. Since the sub broke down - it had been stationary on a sea cliff for the past five days - the crew was unable to radio for help. There was another way to get food, the man knew it was the only way he would ever survive this hell.

In the recreational area of the submarine, the three remaining crew members sat and stared and the giant fish swam by, the beady eyes staring at the crew, the long saws on their noses cutting through the water like a blade through flesh.

One of the women stumbled over to the scuba and harpoon sets in the corner. She stared outside, then glanced at her crewmates. The sawfish were about 200 metres away, busy with a school of fish. Pulling on the wetsuit, she looked to her brother, another crew member on the sub. "I'll be fine," she said and stepped into the airlock. Freezing water rushed into the box, and the woman swam out, the comms crackling into life.

The lady swam further out into the chasm. A couple of adult tuna swam past about 50 metres away from the submarine. She aimed her harpoon and took the shot. The blade pierced the scales of one of the tuna, and blood speared out into the water. The lady frantically swam back, dragging the fish behind her. The sawfish was rushing towards her, they were fifty metres away, twenty metres, ten metres.

Shril screams and pleas for help shot through the intercom as a sawfish rose out of the depths, its blade skewering the lady through her eye. Clumps of flesh and red mist spread through the water as other sawfish joined in, the blades stabbing her through her stomach, slicing her leg off, skinning her arms. More and more sawfish swam around her in a frenzy, the screams getting louder and shaking through the sub. After a minute of torture, the biggest fish ripped through her midsection, disembowelling her. Entrails spilled out of her torso. Her legs were ripped apart and eaten by two sawfish. The remains of the woman floated for a second and were engulfed by the creatures, the screams fading out into static.

Internal Fixation of Small Fractures Urs Heim, Karl M. Pfeiffer, 2012-12-06 The second English language edition of the Small Fragment Set Manual was enthusiastically received and quickly went into a second printing In preparing a third edition we found it necessary to revise the text extensively and partly restructure it The reasons for this are numerous Experience of recent years has brought technical refinements in the operative treatment of many types of small fracture Many of these changes stem from the small fragment set training programs conducted in Switzerland since 1980 and also from courses and symposia that have been held in other European countries and the United States These events were occasions for a fruitful exchange of experience with surgeons who were critical of our methods As a result of this exchange we perceived a need both to revise our indications and to give greater attention to alternative techniques We also felt it necessary to respond to criticisms of the first two editions concerning the catalog like instrument lists and illustrations and the attention given to fundamental techniques Many surgeons who work or would like to work with small implants especially those practicing abroad are inexperienced in operations on the larger bones It is imperative that these colleagues be given a basic introduction to the biomechanical thinking of the Swiss Association for the Study of Internal Fixation ASIF Kathleen Brooks on Forex Kathleen Brooks,2013-03-27 This book will start with the basics of how foreign exchange works but will include clear ideas told with simplicity to cut through the jargon Many diagrams and real life examples are included
