Abstract Early Reading First (ERF) was created to address problems related to language and development among economically disadvantaged and language-minority preschool children through quality classroom processes, professional development, and instruction. More than any previous initiative, ERF specifies what early literacy instruction should look like in preschool classrooms; however, to date, scant research has examined the effectiveness of the program. In this quasi-experimental study, the effectiveness of ERF preschool enrichment was evaluated through comparison with the performance of demographically similar children from the same school district who received practice-as-usual instruction. As in previous research, ERF-enriched instruction was found to enhance acquisition of alphabet knowledge and print concepts. Unlike previous studies, however, it was also found to promote vocabulary development. Multilevel models were chosen to take into account the non-independence of students in the same classroom in testing the effects of ERF.

Reading First is a federal initiative that seeks to buffer against the detrimental effects of poverty on children's academic outcomes by incorporating all of the elements supported by scientifically based reading research to address the present and future reading gaps of high risk preschool children. The tenets of ERF are teacher professional development, high quality language and print rich environments, the teaching of emergent literacy skills based on scientifically based reading research, SBRR, and the early identification of reading problems through the informed use of appropriate assessment measures. The present study was designed to assess the effectiveness of ERF enriched preschool classrooms located in a small city in a Southwestern state on both short and mid term early literacy outcomes of high risk preschoolers in a treatment condition and a comparison group. A total of 239 children participated in the study: 110 children in the ERF treatment group and 129 children in the practice as usual contrast group. The longitudinal effect of the ERF intervention on participating students from pre kindergarten through the middle of first grade was investigated via multilevel modeling. Four multilevel models were developed for two subtests of the Tejas Lee Francis Carlson and Cardenas Hagan 2006 Spanish alphabet knowledge (i.e. identificación de las letras) and Spanish story comprehension (i.e. comprensión auditiva) and two subtests of the Texas Primary Reading Inventory (TPRI) Center for Academic and Reading Skills 2004 English Alphabet Knowledge and English Story Comprehension. Results of the present study support the findings reported by similar prior studies indicating that while ERF effectively increases students' alphabet knowledge, greater effort is necessary toward programming for increasing student outcomes on story comprehension.

Promoting Early Reading Michael C.

McKenna, Sharon Walpole, Kristin Conradi, 2010-04-22. Bringing together leading scholars, this book describes proven ways to enhance early literacy skills in 3 and 4 year olds, especially those from low income families. Presented are scientifically based methods and approaches that are being applied in Early Reading First programs around the country. Important topics include promoting oral language and phonemic awareness, conducting read alouds, setting up effective classroom environments, meeting the needs of English language learners, providing effective preschool coaching, using assessment to plan instruction, and helping students transition to kindergarten. Contributors also share lessons learned about evaluating and sustaining high quality programs.

Professional Development for Early Reading Teachers. NCEE Evaluation Brief 2009-4055

Institute of Education Sciences (ED), National Center for Education Evaluation and Regional Assistance, 2009. A recent national study of state and local No Child Left Behind activities indicated that 80 percent of elementary teachers reported participating in 24 hours or less of professional development on reading instruction during the 2003-2004 school year and summer. Reading and professional development experts are concerned that this is not intensive enough to be effective and that it does not focus enough on subject matter knowledge. To help states and districts make informed decisions about professional development to improve reading instruction, the U.S. Department of Education commissioned the study of early reading professional development to examine the impact of two research based interventions for reading instruction. One was an eight day institute and seminar series that began in the summer of 2005 and continued through much of the 2005 06 school year The second was the same institute series plus in school coaching The study was implemented in 90 schools in six districts 270 teachers and about 5 500 students with equal numbers of schools randomly assigned in each district to the institute group the institute plus coaching group or the control group which received the usual professional development offered by the district Although research based professional development for early reading teachers increased their knowledge of reading content and recommended instructional practices and their use of one of those practices explicit instruction findings did not indicate improved student reading achievement Contains 3 figures For the full report The Impact of Two Professional Development Interventions on Early Reading Instruction and Achievement NCEE 2008 4030 see ED502700 Reading First's Impact.
