

The telemetric scale

To calculate distances, based on the speed of sound through air, when observation is both visible and audible.

The moment the event takes place, the centre second hand is started, then stopped when the sound is heard. The corresponding reading on the scale denotes distance in miles or kilometres (as indicated on scale itself).

In this particular instance, the event took place 1600 metres away from observation point. (Scale marked "1 KM" i.e. kilometre and centre second hand indicating 5 seconds).

The pulsometric scale

To register rate of pulse per minute without calculation.

The centre second hand is started at the beginning of an observation and stopped when the number of pulsations indicated on the scale is reached. The pulse/minute rate is instantly read on the scale. In this particular case, the pulse rate is 100.
