

1. Environment, Habitat and Ecosystem

1.1. Environment

- An environment is a natural component in which biotic (resulting from living organisms) and abiotic (physical, not directly derived from living organisms) factors interact among themselves and with each other. These interactions shape the habitat and ecosystem of an organism or ecological community (a group of species found together).
- Biotic components include living organisms, dead and decaying matter, bones, fossils, etc. Abiotic components include climate, weather, humus (the organic component of soil formed by the decomposition of plant material), natural phenomenon like lightning, etc. Soil usually has both biotic (dead and decaying matter) and abiotic components (humus, minerals, etc.).
- Biotic is not the same as organic: Organic compounds (biomolecules like carbohydrates, lipids, proteins, and nucleic acids having at least one carbon-hydrogen bond) are those obtained directly or indirectly from plants and animals. The compounds obtained from minerals are known as inorganic compounds (typically lacking carbon-hydrogen (C-H) bonds).
- In the biological sense, an environment constitutes the physical (nutrients, water, air, climate) and biological factors (biomolecules, organisms) along with their chemical interactions (chemical cycles – carbon cycle, nitrogen cycle, etc.) that affect an organism or a group of organisms. All organisms depend on the environment to carry out their natural life processes and meet their physical requirements (food, energy, water, oxygen, shelter, etc.).

1.2. Habitat

- Habitat is the physical environment in which an organism lives (address of an organism). Many habitats together make up the environment.
- A single habitat may be common for multiple organisms which have similar requirements. For example, a single aquatic habitat may support a fish, frog, crab, phytoplankton, and many others. The various species sharing a habitat thus have the same 'address'. E.g., forest, lake, etc.

Habitat vs Environment

- A habitat always has life in it, whereas the environment does not necessarily have life in it → All habitats are environments, but all environments are not habitats.
- A habitat is always a preference of one species. An environment could be a preference of many species that could eventually become many habitats.
- Usually, the environment governs the properties of a habitat, but not vice versa.

1.3. Ecosystem

- An ecosystem can be visualised as a functional unit of nature, where living organisms (producers, consumers, and decomposers) interact among themselves and with the surrounding physical environment. An ecosystem consists of biotic and abiotic components and limited energy. Ex: Aquatic Ecosystem.
