To Oregon or Bust!

Between 1800 and 1860 many people moved west. Farmers had heard of the rich soil and open land for animals to graze. The West also had supplies of gold, silver, coal, iron, copper, and timber.

The people usually followed trails that fur trappers or Native Americans had made. The Oregon Trail was one of the most well traveled. It went from Missouri to Oregon. It took about five months to travel its 2,000 miles. Some settlers followed the bumpy dirt path on horses. Others rode in wagons pulled by mules or oxen. These wagons had wooden boxes covered by a canvas tarp. The people packed bedding, guns, tools, and food in the wagons. To keep the weight down, they left behind anything that wasn't necessary. Still, when an animal died or got too weak to keep pulling the heavy wagon, they had to drop things beside the trail.

Families formed wagon trains. Each train had 30 to 70 wagons. The group hired a man as a guide and leader. Usually he had been a fur trapper who knew the trail well. Even in a big group, people faced jeopardy on the Oregon Trail. The settlers had to face heat, dust storms, and tornadoes. They entered a land that the Native Americans had lived in for thousands of years. Native Americans attacked the pioneers. So did thieves and wolves. Illnesses and a lack of medicine and proper food killed many people. Graves along the trail marked those who didn't make it.

The pioneers had to cross the Great Plains. Then they had to get through the Rocky Mountains before winter. Otherwise, they'd get stuck in the mountains. Snow would block the narrow passages. They could starve or freeze to death.

In spite of all of these hardships, thousands of people reached Oregon. Then they faced new challenges as they tried to build a life in the wilderness.
