The Streisand Effect

Directions: Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow. Refer to the text to check your answers when appropriate.

The California Coastal Records Project formed in 2002. Its founders, Kenneth and Gabrielle Adelman, took aerial photos of the coastline. They wanted to document erosion. They posted these pictures on their website. In 2003, famous singer Barbara Streisand sued the Adelmans for $0 million dollars.

Barbara Streisand sued the Adelmans because they posted a photo of her Malibu home. She and her lawyers felt that this violated her privacy. The image with Streisand's home is known as "Image 3850." Streisand and her lawyers demanded that the Adelmans remove "Image 3850." The Adelmans did not comply. They countersued Streisand.

Before Streisand filed suit, "Image 3850" had only been downloaded six times. Two of those downloads were from Streisand's own attorneys. Almost no one in the world had seen "Image 3850" until the lawsuit became a media story. In the next month, people viewed "Image 3850" more than 420,000 times. Streisand's attempt to protect her privacy had backfired.

Streisand tried to suppress something on the Internet. Trying to hide information from people on the Internet often creates greater interest. This social phenomenon is now known as the Streisand effect. When people feel that information is being kept from them, this motivates them to access it. Almost no one wanted to view photos of Streisand's home, until they learned that she didn't want them to see it.

Imagine that you are sitting in your classroom. The teacher whispers something in your classmate's ear. The student's eyes widened with surprise. Don't you want to know what the teacher said? Imagine that the teacher pointed out the window and said, "Don't look over there!" You might be motivated to do the opposite. This is called psychological reactance. The Streisand effect works in this way.

Streisand failed to limit peoples' access to "Image 3850." Spectacularly. And she lost in court too. Her lawsuit was dismissed and she was ordered to pay the Adelman's legal fees. This amounted to $155,567. Was there a better way for her to have minimized the loss of her privacy? How should she have responded to the Adelman's website?
