

Summary of Nonspecific Body Defenses

| Category and associated elements | Protective mechanism |
|--|--|
| Cellular and Chemical Defenses—Second Line of Defense | |
| Phagocytes | Engulf and destroy pathogens that breach surface membrane barriers; macrophages also contribute to immune response. |
| Natural killer cells | Promote cell lysis by direct cell attack against virus-infected or cancerous body cells; do not depend on specific antigen recognition. |
| Inflammatory response | Prevents spread of injurious agents to adjacent tissues, disposes of pathogens and dead tissue cells, and promotes tissue repair; releases chemical mediators that attract phagocytes (and immunocompetent cells) to the area. |
| Antimicrobial chemicals | |
| • Complement | Group of plasma proteins that lyses microorganisms, enhances phagocytosis by opsonization, and intensifies inflammatory response. |
| • Interferons | Proteins released by virus-infected cells that protect uninfected tissue cells from viral takeover; mobilize immune system. |
| • Urine | Normally acid pH inhibits bacterial growth; cleanses the lower urinary tract as it flushes from the body. |
| Fever | Systemic response triggered by pyrogens; high body temperature inhibits multiplication of bacteria and enhances body repair processes. |
