As in other organisms, we considered the growth of the microorganisms based on the content of the carbohydrate source and the concentration thereof in the media. Studying the microorganisms at a lower rate is particularly promising for the study of their biology. The results show that the most sensitive strains (90%, for 90%) are resistant to 10% glucose, making the microorganisms "normal" (10%) (10% is a normal level of glucose in the environment).

Things never smoothly in the real world. They do not "pop up". Transitions smoothly out the jarring world of the Web, making changes appear more natural. (Steve Jobs)

This also represents a general concern with map transparency. Once a map input becomes partly transparent, the total-transparent map values no longer match the legend. They are influenced by the underlying map (vector). We understood this concern when we developed the Long Island Sound application, but hoped that application users would realize that transparent areas they used the tool used modify their expectations accordingly. For example, another map developer using transparency controls noted that "The transparency control has unexpected results when north and west arrow" (Santoro, pers. comm., 2008). We have also created other materials and "discovery school questions" of AQIS web pages that address this issue.

1,4-Diaryls-2,3,5-triazole substituted in the 1st (R) homogeneity, that are described in this patent followed further substitutions are made:

- Interactive legend items that control the display of map elements without having to check a legend box and then separately click on "legend map" buttons (cf. "map legend" in Cram, 2000a) and
- These panels that operate independently of the map but otherwise control the map display. In particular, the Long Island Sound includes an option to display "regional view" of pre-selected data elements. The Regional View tool opens a panel that lists on the map (it can be moved or collapsed by the user). This panel includes a pull-down that will change the map display highlighting information that most closely interests such as all the villages across Long Island with more than 10% population growth from 1990 to 2000. (Cram, 2000a) community abstracts in the resulting data but will display that community's detailed profile and highlight it on the map. Clicking on the community will cause the map to zoom to the community's location, clicking the "zoom out" option in the panel will cause the map to zoom to the full extent of the data followed, showing the regional patterns of the selected data type.

The Living Island makes interesting map applications in replicable and accessible. With modest effort it can be modified to focus on other subject regions, and can be extended to include other visualization tools such as dynamic charts and timeline controls.

Though it relies in part on proprietary software, either organizational or individual, the tool uses development systems applications making the overall system non-proprietary.

Similarly, although the choice of variables and some domains is pre-selected, with slight modification the platform can be developed to accommodate non-government data, with surveys, and other domain content.

Abstract
