Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were randomly assigned to either a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of aerobic and strength training exercises. The control group received no intervention. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. Secondary outcomes included changes in physical fitness, body composition, and blood pressure. The results showed that the training program significantly improved HRQL, physical fitness, and body composition in the intervention group compared to the control group. The improvements in HRQL were maintained at the 12-week follow-up. The study suggests that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary middle-aged women.
