Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were randomly assigned to either a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The control group did not participate in any training. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The secondary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured using a 6-minute walk test. The results showed that the training program had a significant positive effect on HRQL and physical fitness. The participants in the training group showed a significant increase in HRQL scores and a significant increase in the distance walked during the 6-minute walk test. The participants in the control group showed no significant change in HRQL scores and no significant change in the distance walked during the 6-minute walk test. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary middle-aged women.
