The two sets of specimens are distributed in 192000 square-foot increments in 1200 ft. by 1600 ft. grid pattern to further structure the 1200 ft. by 1600 ft. rectangular domain. All points are marked with a hard hat pinning surface must be used for marking. All points of measurement are combined with the corresponding three-point bending test results on the same specimen from the previous group of measurements. The specimens are then grouped into three sets of three-point bending tests. The first set of three-point bending tests is performed on the specimens that are marked with a hard hat pinning surface. The three different marking types are distinguished. The second set of three-point bending tests is performed on the specimens that are marked with a hard hat pinning surface. The third set of three-point bending tests is performed on the specimens that are marked with a hard hat pinning surface. All three sets of three-point bending tests are performed on the specimens that are marked with a hard hat pinning surface.
