A laboratory culture of Escherichia coli was grown in continuous culture. The culture was grown in a chemostat with the growth rate fixed at the "control" value. The culture was then split into two groups: one group was grown in a chemostat with the growth rate fixed at the "control" value, and the other group was grown in a chemostat with the growth rate fixed at the "control" value. The growth rate of the culture was then measured for a period of 10 days, and the results were compared to the control. The results showed that the growth rate of the culture was significantly lower in the chemostat with the growth rate fixed at the "control" value.
