Bid goes forward to stay provincial order on dams

New reinforcement technique to be studied

SPENCER ANDERSON/DAILY NEWS
The City of Nanaimo will have its solicitor draft an appeal and a request to halt an order from the B.C. water controller to complete remediation work on the Colliery dam, following a decision by council Monday.
 Mayor Bill McKay called Monday's decision a positive development.
 "There's no doubt we're under the wire here," he said. "However, it's always been my belief that the dam safety (section) wants us to do remediation for the dam and this takes a significant step forward."
 Council voted 8-1 Monday to have city hall request to stay the order and launch an appeal so the city could pursue detailed designs from U.S. firms GeoStabilization International to reinforce the areas behind the lower and middle dams with a network of metal grids bolted in place and layered with cement to prevent erosion.

 The city, which now finds itself in contravention of the provincial Water Act, has been grappling over the question of how to address safety concerns with the dams since October 2012.
 City staff warned Monday that the technique proposed by GSI has, to their knowledge, not been applied to dam remediation in B.C. and could therefore require further review. The Ministry of Forests, Lands and Natural Resource Operations appeared to confirm the assertion in an email Tuesday.
 "The ministry has not received sufficient information to assess whether the GSI proposal is acceptable," a spokesman said. "As previously indicated to the City of Nanaimo technical committee, unless the technology has widely been used in dam remediation elsewhere in North America, the province would likely require that the proposal be reviewed by an independent dam safety expert acceptable to the province."

 Coun. Jim Kipp put forward a concept drawing for modifications to the lower dam Monday that included hardening the dam's edge and using concrete beams to raise the height of the spillway.
 A concrete beam that would also include public bench seating was also included in the drawing. Kipp has also proposed "beautification" measures to improve the area.
 Kipp said GSI informed him that they would be able to complete upgrades to both the lower and middle dam for $3 million, significantly less than the proposed $8.1 million for a new labyrinth spillway at the lower dam or the estimated

$3 million to $6 million cost build an alternate spillway.
 However, the city now finds itself facing a time crunch. The order issued by the province gives the city until May 1 to choose between the labyrinth and alternate spillway options, and until May 22 to submit design and construction plans. The city must also complete physical upgrades to the dam by Oct. 15.
 Coun. Diane Brennan was the sole council member to vote against the motion to begin an appeal, raising concerns about the potential cost of the process.
 The GSI option was originally proposed last year. McKay said he would have preferred that some of the work on the proposal had been done sooner, but said it was "positive" that council was taking steps to address the province's order to remediate the dams.

Tax debt hits $50.9M after new water treatment project costs

SPENCER ANDERSON/DAILY NEWS
 Nanaimo residents' share of the city's debt inched up by the end of last year, but the city's share of the year's costs with more money in reserves, according to annual financial statements.
 The city is required to produce a full account of its finances each year, including outstanding long-term debts, revenue and operating and capital expenses.
 A city financial department report of the document says the city saw a net increase of $6.3 million in new debt as of the end of 2014, bringing the city's total outstanding debt to $50.9 million.
 That brings the total share of city debt for every man, woman and child to $572, up from $545 in 2013.
 The increase is due to the $9.2 million the city borrowed last year to fund construction of the new water treatment plant project, said city accounting services manager Laura Mercer.
 Borrowing for the facility represents just over $22 million of the city's total debt.
 However, some similar pieces of that long-term debt are to be repaid within a few years. The remaining $3.5 million the city owes on borrowing from the Aquatic Centre is to be repaid in 2020. Also to be retired is the city's debt for upgrades to the Harbourfront Parkade. The remaining $1.05 million will be amortized in 2020.
 The city still has to pay off approximately $21.4 million for construction of the Vancouver Island Conference Centre.
 However, the city also closed 2014 with more cash in hand.
 The municipality now has a pool of $14.1 million in accumulated operating surplus funds, leftover money that is not set aside for any one specific project.
 The city also added $1.7 million to the pool from surplus tax revenues, as well as approximately $253,000 from water revenues for a total increase of just less than $2 million.
 The city also beefed up its equipment reserve by $1 million and added approximately $2.8 million to reserves for infrastructure renewal and replacement.
 Mercer said the city is trying to build up reserves to pay for specific projects or unforeseen expenses.
 As for 2015 finances, city council has yet to pass a financial plan for this fiscal year. The municipality must pass a financial plan by June 30 and tax rates by mid-May.
