

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the cardiovascular and metabolic responses to a 1000-m swim. Ten subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and a training group. The training group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three 1000-m swims per week. The control group did not swim. The training group showed a significant improvement in cardiovascular and metabolic responses to the 1000-m swim compared to the control group. The training group showed a significant decrease in heart rate, stroke volume, and oxygen consumption during the swim. The training group also showed a significant increase in lactate threshold and time to exhaustion during the swim. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular and metabolic responses to a 1000-m swim.
