Protective Coatings Mei Wen, Karel Dušek, 2017-05-26 This book focuses on characterization of organic coatings by different testing methods and understanding of structure formation and materials properties The knowledge of protective organic coatings and current test methods is based largely on empirical experience This book aims at explaining the coating property changes during film drying and curing in terms of chemical and physical transformations Current test methods are reviewed with emphasis on understanding their physical basis and expressing the test results in terms of comparable physical quantities In general this book provides readers a deeper understanding of the binder design coating film formation process properties build up appearance and defect formation and automotive paint application It also suggests manifold ways to improving the coatings performance This book is designed for coating professionals to gain deeper understanding of characterization techniques and to select the right ones to solve their coating problems It is ideal for both experienced and early career scientists and engineers Also it is useful for graduate students in the general area of protective coatings

Increasing FTIR Spectromicroscopy Speed and Resolution Through Compressive Imaging, 2007 At the Advanced Light Source at Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory we are investigating how to increase both the speed and resolution of synchrotron infrared imaging Synchrotron infrared beamlines have diffraction limited spot sizes and high signal to noise however spectral images must be obtained one point at a time and the spatial resolution is limited by the effects of diffraction One technique to assist in speeding up spectral image acquisition is described here and uses compressive imaging algorithms Compressive imaging can potentially attain resolutions higher than allowed by diffraction and or can acquire spectral images without having to measure every spatial point individually thus increasing the speed of such maps Here we present and discuss initial tests of compressive imaging techniques performed with ALS Beamline 1 4 3 s Nic Plan infrared microscope Beamline 1 4 4 Continuum XL IR microscope and also with a stand alone Nicolet Nexus 470 FTIR spectrometer

Survey of Military Applications for Fourier Transform Infrared (FTIR) Spectroscopy Robert G. Hauser, 1999-02-01 This paper surveyed four potential military uses for a Fourier Transform Infrared FTIR Spectrometer A physical method to retrieve vertical atmospheric temperature profiles using a least squares solution on atmospheric radiance observed at the surface in the 4 3 micrometer carbon dioxide absorption band was analyzed The method was not successful Weighting functions calculated from the surface looking up were a maximum at the surface so no unique solution for temperature retrieval by height was determined Observed atmospheric radiance measurements were compared with radiance calculated using the Moderate Resolution Transmittance Code MODTRAN Qualitative comparison showed spectral features of observed and calculated radiance plots matched exceptionally well The utility of the FTIR spectrometer for environmental monitoring was demonstrated by identifying CO₂ CO O₃ HCl SO₂ and N₂O emissions from a coal burning plant smokestack An FTIR spectrometer was used to collect data of controlled detonations of statically displayed Mk 82 Mk 83 and Mk 84 bombs High speed Anti Radiant Missiles HARM Tomahawk Land Attack Missiles TLAM and C 4 plastic explosive over the 1800 6000 cm spectral band at 16 cm resolution Results showed there were unique spectral features associated with some warhead types
