Driving in the Dark Deborah Moggach, 2022-08-16 Disturbing and witty A deftly described odyssey that places the battle of the sexes in a new arena from the author of The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel The Sunday Times Meet Desmond Fletcher At forty two years old his marriage has ended and he finds himself all alone in an apartment above an electrical repair shop lent to him by his soon to be ex wife's brother With not much else to do besides his job driving coaches Desmond has a lot of time to think Mostly about where his life has gone wrong the women he has failed and the child he has never known More than a decade ago a woman Desmond was seeing became pregnant but wanted nothing to do with marrying him or any man for that matter Now with his life in limbo Desmond becomes obsessed with finding his son Hijacking a coach he travels across England unearthing clues and following in his son's footsteps from London to the mountains to the fens It's a quest that will take Desmond deep into his own heart where he just might discover what he's really looking for Poignant and funny Deborah Moggach is brilliant at capturing just the right voice for her characters Cosmopolitan Moggach for the purposes of this book has turned herself into a bloke His monologue throughout strikes me as totally authentic but not only does Moggach get his lingo right she thinks through his head dramatizing his confusion decency wit pain and determination This is not just ventriloquism but empathy so complete as to be phenomenal The Irish Times Acutely funny and sad The Mail on Sunday
