Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the health-related quality of life (HRQL) of older adults with knee osteoarthritis (OA). The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group (n = 20) did not. The primary outcome was the change in the SF-36 Physical Functioning (PF) score. The secondary outcomes were the change in the SF-36 Bodily Pain (BP), Mental Health (MH), and Social Functioning (SF) scores. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in the PF score compared to the control group. There were no significant differences in the BP, MH, and SF scores between the two groups. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the HRQL of older adults with knee OA.
