

*Physical Oceanography and Meteorology,
Navy Search and Rescue Operation*

Science Topic: Meteorology and Physical Oceanography

Grades: 9th – 12th

Essential Questions:

- What are the physical conditions of the ocean that affect marine navigation?
- What are the meteorological conditions of the ocean that affect marine navigation, in particular wind?
- How are the physical forces of the ocean and meteorology measured and used?

Lesson Overview:

In this lesson students will be introduced to the fundamentals of physical oceanography (waves, tides, currents, etc.) and meteorology (winds) and how they affect ocean navigation and the everyday operations of the US Navy, in particular search and rescue operations (SAR). Students will be asked to use Google Earth, a paper chart, and navigation board to find latitude and longitude, plot a course, and measure nautical distance. They will also calculate navigation travel speed for a vessel while accounting for nautical drift, locate the region to search for a parachuted officer, and present a risk assessment in a SAR scenario of a navy pilot lost at sea.

A companion interactive whiteboard presentation that incorporates video and glossary terms used throughout this lesson is provided to use in classroom instruction (see Teachers Guide for directions).

Learning Objectives:

Students will be able to describe the branches of physical oceanography and meteorology, and then use mathematics and technology to calculate wave height over distance, plot a course and adjust bearings for drift, calculate the drift of a pilot along an ocean current, and conduct a risk analysis of a mock search and rescue (SAR) scenario.

Analysis

- Analyze the role of physical oceanography and meteorology in ocean navigation.
- Using information from a SAR scenario analyze the information needed for a successful rescue and explain how that information will be obtained.

Application

- Learn the tools used to measure tides, waves, and meteorological conditions on the ocean and how to apply them.
- Role-play in a search and rescue scenario.
