It is important to stress that although the use of a computer is not essential, it is highly recommended, as it will greatly assist in the analysis of the data.

It is possible species overlap may not occur in all habitats where there is overlap in the other phylogenetic characters (space) and therefore suggesting interacting would be considered unlikely. This is particularly confirmed by previous work showing that some phylogenetic traits are correlated with phylogenetic distance and some are not (e.g. phylogenetic distance, leaf area, flower size and vegetative traits) of the plant community in the community (e.g. phylogenetic distance, leaf area, flower size and vegetative traits). Therefore, it is likely that the traits that are correlated with phylogenetic distance are likely to be correlated with phylogenetic distance and some characters.

It is important that the results, which represent the results of the research, are not only presented in a clear and concise manner, but also in a way that is accessible to the general public. This is because the results of the research are often used to inform policy and practice, and it is important that the results are presented in a way that is understandable to those who are not experts in the field. The results should be presented in a way that is both accurate and accessible, and should be presented in a way that is both clear and concise.
