

1. Fear of weight gain – clients resort to self-induced vomiting, extensive dieting, and intense exercise resulting in excessive weight loss (<85% expected weight). Clients who self-induce vomiting may experience enlargement of the salivary glands and erosion of tooth enamel.
 2. Fluid and electrolyte imbalance – excessive vomiting can cause hypokalemia and metabolic alkalosis
 3. Amenorrhea – clients are often amenorrheic due to decreased body fat (low estrogen)
 4. Decreased metabolic rate – severe weight loss results in hypotension, bradycardia, decreased body temperature, and cold intolerance
 5. Lanugo (fine terminal hair) can be seen in extreme case
- Nutrition support (enteral tube feedings and total parenteral nutrition) is usually reserved for clients with anorexia nervosa who are severely ill and/or have not responded to oral nutritional therapy. Such clients are at high risk for medical complications from anorexia nervosa, including death. Criteria for nutrition support include:
 - Severe weight loss that is life threatening
 - Client's unwillingness to adhere to a treatment plan of oral feedings
 - The priority nursing actions for this high-risk client include interventions to meet physiological and safety needs. Providing one-on-one supervision during the tube feeding will ensure that the client is actually receiving the feeding and prevent the client from stopping the feeding and/or pulling out the nasogastric tube.
 - During the one-on-one contact with the client, the nurse can promote a therapeutic and trusting relationship with the client by:
 - Being honest and accepting of the client
 - Presenting the reality of the condition
 - Acknowledging the client's feelings of loss of control and anger
 - Encouraging the client to express feelings and fears
 - This is an appropriate intervention for a client with anorexia nervosa. Feelings related to lack of control are an underlying problem for these clients, who use food as a way to deal with them. Keeping a diary or journal of feelings will help the client recognize and express them more clearly. However, this is not the priority nursing action.
 - This may be a true statement; clients with anorexia nervosa are usually discharged to out-patient follow-up and treatment or to a residential treatment facility once an acceptable weight gain has been achieved and maintained. However, this is not the priority nursing action.

INVOLUNTARY ADMISSION

- Clients have the right to refuse hospital admission and treatment. However, all states and provinces have laws and procedures for involuntary admission that require clients to receive inpatient treatment for a psychiatric disorder against their will. The legal criteria for involuntary admission include:
 - The individual appears to be an imminent danger to self or others
 - The individual has a grave disability (ie, is unable to adequately care for basic needs [food, clothing, shelter, medical care, personal safety]) as a result of a mental illness
- Clients also have the right to the least restrictive environment in which treatment can be provided in a safe manner. Involuntary commitment is generally used as a last resort in dealing with a client whose illness is so severe that judgment and insight in deciding to refuse treatment are markedly impaired.
