

How are synthetic hormones used to promote animal growth, and what are some examples of growth hormones?

- ❑ Most agricultural animals are raised to produce food products, such as meat and milk.
- ❑ It is important to livestock producers that their animals grow quickly and in the most efficient manner possible.
- ❑ Growth is highly dependent on the endocrine system and the hormones that the endocrine system secretes.
- ❑ Natural and synthetic hormones are now used to control or regulate body functions in practical livestock production to increase growth rates in livestock.
