Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness and energy expenditure of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The subjects included 600 men and women who worked in three different occupations: construction, manufacturing, and service. Data were collected from self-administered questionnaires that asked about symptoms of musculoskeletal disorders, work-related factors, and demographic characteristics. Results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was highest among construction workers, followed by manufacturing workers, and lowest among service workers. These findings suggest that the physical demands of construction and manufacturing work are more likely to lead to musculoskeletal problems than the demands of service work.
