

CONTROLS

It must be remembered that the compressor operates whenever the engine is running. When the outside weather is comfortable and no air conditioning is desired, a solenoid valve must be provided to prevent the compressor from lowering the pressure in the cooling unit. As stated earlier the solenoid by-pass valve is energized when the engine is running and the manual control switch is in the "OFF" position. Pressure is supplied to the blowers or solenoid by-pass valve. The solenoid valve then remains open, the refrigerant will by-pass through the low pressure side of the compressor. This action reduces the pressure in the cooling unit and the coil temperature remains higher than when under normal refrigeration.

When the solenoid valve is closed, the system will resume full operation again some means must be provided to permit the user to return to the air conditioning system to the degree of cooling that is desired when the

A control switch mounted in the center of the instrument panel to operate the system in the "OFF" position which prevents the system from operating. It also provides a means of partial refrigeration by placing the switch in the "COOL" position or full refrigeration automatically controlled by the switch in the "COLD" position.

By viewing the "Electrical Control Circuit" Fig. 63, we can see how it works.

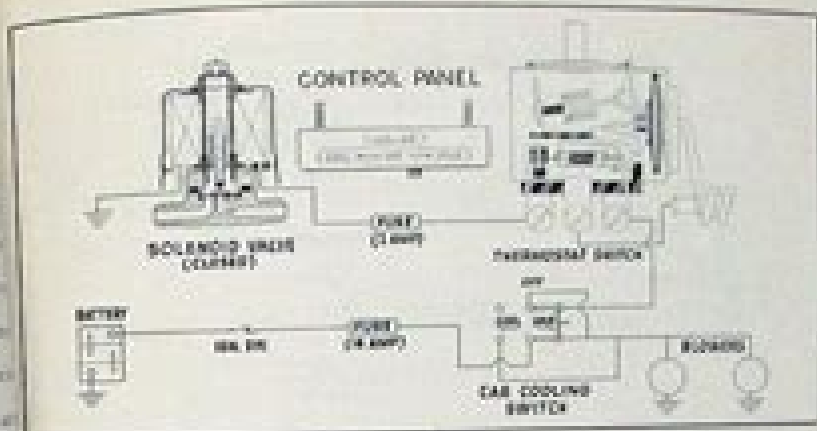

Fig. 8b. Information Wiring Diagram of Control Circuit

ELECTRICAL CONTROL CIRCUIT - COLD POSITION

With the control switch in the "COLD" position the blowers are turned on, current is also delivered to the thermostat. Assuming the interior of the car is warm, it will be taking the refrigeration. In this case the thermostatic tube in the right return air duct will have increased the pressure in the bellows causing the contact points to close. With the thermostatic contact points closed, the solenoid by-pass valve will be energized and will hold the by-pass valve closed. The system will then be under full refrigeration. As the cool return air, passing over the thermostatic tube it cools the tube which reduces the pressure in the bellows and as a result opens the contact points. The solenoid by-pass valve then opens which causes the system to go "OFF" refrigeration. The small lamp bulb causes the thermostat to "Anticipate" the fact that the car is warming up and will assist to throw the contact points. The over and full of operation is greatly reduced and the effect on the refrigerant is one of stabilized
