

In some infant-sharing monkeys there has been selection on infants to attract allo-maternal attentions by evolving distinctive natal coats visible at a distance. These black-and-white colobus monkey babies arrive in the world snow-white, then gradually over the first months of life morph into the black-and-white dress of adults. As far as allomothers are concerned, the younger the baby, the more powerful the stimulus. Gradual loss of the natal coat coincides with declining alloma-ternal interest. color as their parents, distinguished only by a contrasting black stripe down the middle of their forehead. Such drabness seems to challenge the hypothesis that reliance on shared care favors the evolution of fancy natal coats. Rather than brightly broadcasting their neonativity, babies whose survival will depend absolutely on allomaternal attention wear uniforms that blend discreetly into the fur of the adult to whose back they cling. One possible explanation is that marmoset babies do not have to compete for alloparental attentions as much, since ordinarily only one mother is producing at a time. Alternatively, such seeming anomalies may be reminders of the constraints past evolutionary history places on natural selection. Rather than devising the perfect solution in the most
