¹¹The timing of wage growth and replacement rates has been shown to contribute to any claim to macroeconomic neutrality in government by Muscatelli (1997, 2000) and by others, as to the quality and stability of such replacement rates. The authors of these papers have been largely neglected here in favour of the hypothesis by Muscatelli (1997, 2000) that the macro-neutrality of the particular 'type' of replacement (not 'level') is crucial to any claim to such overall economic neutrality, or neutrality in particular.
