Iske, 1997 Pediatric Brain Injury Carole Wedel Sellars, Candace Hill Vegter, 1993-01-01 Pediatric Traumatic Brain Injury and Executive Function Gregory C. Jackson, 2017 Traumatic Brain Injury TBI is a leading cause of death and disability in the United States This project sought to identify differences between children and adolescents in terms of executive function after sustaining a TBI This project used archival data from a local hospital to identify the effects of age and injury severity on objective measures of executive function Two tail T tests were run to measure group differences between adolescents and children group mean EF performance across domains Multiple regressions were run to measure predictability of age and severity on performance in each EF domain Findings demonstrated no significant group differences Although there were no significant differences between group means there was a trend of higher scores overall for adolescents Age in months and severity significantly predicted verbal abstraction performance and accounted for 45 25% of the variability Processing speed emerged as an area of deficit for adolescents Future research should focus on identifying longitudinal differences in EF performance between age groups and what individual factors affect EF performance
