

Opening remarks: 16th Amaldi Conference

I am pleased to make a few opening remarks at this 16th Amaldi Conference on Problems of Global Security. It is no news to you that, as President of the Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei, Amaldi was highly supportive of these meetings until his untimely death in 1989. Until then, the meetings were known by a different name. It will also not come as a surprise to you if I show you how the conference has traveled over time since its inception.

I am very pleased that this meeting is being held here in Trieste for the first time. I am equally pleased to welcome you here on behalf of ICTP and to wish you a productive conference.

These conferences have always been concerned about global security. When they started in 1988, the major issue was the possible nuclear confrontation between USA and the USSR, and it is not surprising that the conferences spent considerable time and effort on just that issue. Allow me to show you the agenda for the meeting of 1989---by the way, the last meeting that Amaldi attended. It is clear that most of the attention was nuclear threat to global security.
