Bureau of Labor,1908 Contracting Masculinity Gillian Creese,1999-12-15 The history of labour in Canada is most often understood to mean and presented as the history of blue collar workers especially men And it is a story of union solidarity to gain wages rights and the like from employers In Contracting Masculinity Gillian Creese examines in depth the white collar office workers union at BC Hydro and shows how collective bargaining involves the negotiation of gender class and race Over the first 50 years of the office union s existence male and female members were approximately equal in number Yet equality has ended there Women are concentrated at the lower rungs of the job hierarchy while men start higher up the ladder and enjoy more job mobility men s office work has been redefined as a wide range of technical jobs while women s work has been concentrated in a narrow range of clerical positions As well for decades Canadian Aboriginals and people of colour were not employed by BC Hydro which has resulted in a racialized gendered workplace What is the role of workers and their trade unions in constructing male and female work a process that is often seen as the outcome solely of management decisions How is this process of gendering also racialized so that women and men of different race and ethnicity are differentially privileged at work How do males in a white collar union create and maintain their own image of masculinity in the face of a feminized occupation and a more militant male blue collar union housed within the same corporation What impact does the gender composition of union leadership have on collective bargaining How do traditions of union solidarity affect attempts to bargain for greater equity in the office These are the central questions that Contracting Masculinity seeks to answer in this in depth look at a Canadian union Wages and Related Benefits: 17 Labor Markets United States.
