

ALL ABOARD!

The journey to Hogwarts—and taking glory—begins.

Shortly after discussing Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone, Harry finds himself at London's King's Cross station, recognizing his journey to Hogwarts from Platform 9½. It's the place where Harry makes his important first step into the magical new life.

This particular movie set made for a highly appropriate location for the opening shot undertaken by the Wizards of Being competing teams.

Five film worlds have captured our hearts and imaginations as completely as the Harry Potter movies. From Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone to Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows—Part 2, and a year's movie later, we're on a journey of adventure, curiosity, inspiration, and celebration. Like Harry, the Wizards of Being teams would find themselves visiting some locations, taking part in an epic competition that celebrates some of the finest sets from across the eight movies of the Harry Potter film series. Their first task required them to create a showcase to reflect their past Harry Potter connectivity, as well as showcase their individual looking glass(es)—and present it at Platform 9½.

The movie scene that introduced the magical gateway was filmed at King's Cross on a Sunday afternoon. The station is renowned for its Victorian architecture, sporting two two-story train sheds topped by barrel-vaulted roofs, which is what the filmmakers wanted to showcase in the scene. Production designer Stuart Craig recalls "this stage is a platform that had big brick doors under big supporting arches that connected to another platform, which gave it a subterranean feel to cut it before they went through it to the other side." As a result, the secret passageway to Platform 9½ seen in the film is, in reality, physical between Platforms 4 and 5.
