fact sheet

Osteoporosis is a disease where the bones become fragile and brittle resulting in a higher risk of breaks than in normal bone.

What is Osteoporosis?

Osteoporosis and fractures are major causes of injury and long-term disability, and can reduce life expectancy in older Australians. One-fifth of people who suffer a hip fracture from osteoporosis have a life expectancy less than six months. Of those who survive, only 50% will be able to walk unassisted or stay in their own homes. Some may even need full-time nursing care.

Osteoporosis is often called a silent disease, as there are usually no signs or symptoms until somebody has a fracture. Any bone can be affected but the most common are bones in the hip, spine, wrist, ribs, pelvis and upper arm.

Preventing Osteoporosis

Preventing osteoporosis is important. Although there are treatments, there is no cure. You can reduce your risk of developing osteoporosis and fractures:

- eat a balanced diet rich in calcium and vitamin D with 3 daily serves of dairy providing enough calcium for most people
- vitamin D helps the body absorb calcium and is found in small amounts in dairy products, egg yolks, salt water fish and margarine. The best source of vitamin D comes from safe sunlight exposure.
- weight-bearing and strengthening exercises - such as walking, cycling, dancing and weight training can be useful
- have a bone density test, if appropriate
- ask your doctor if you need medication
- ask your doctor if any medicines you take may be causing bone loss
- not smoking
- drinking less alcohol.

Physiotherapy and Osteoporosis

Physiotherapy can help to strengthen your bones and muscles. It can also help prevent bone thinning, reduce falls and help you manage any pain.

As a living tissue, bone density can be improved through exercise. A physiotherapist will work with you to find exercises that suit your needs and help manage your osteoporosis.
