DERMOT CHANGES QITE POST

In Forbidden Love by Can Themba we have the theme of fear, love, apartheid, hypocrisy, defiance and acceptance. Narrated in the third person by an unnamed narrator the reader realises from the beginning of the story that Themba may be exploring the theme of fear. Dora's family live their life in fear. An irrational fear of having any involvement with black South Africans. It is through their beliefs and the actions of their peers that they consider black South Africans to be beneath them. To be less human than them. Though ironically Davie has had a relationship with Salome in which a child was conceived. Despite this Davie still considers it appropriate to beat Mike up due to him having a relationship with Dora. Which may leave some readers to suggest that Davie, like many white South Africans at the time, is a hypocrite. He believes in his sister living her life one way while he turns his back on the same ideology which results in him being afraid that he will be exposed for the fact that he has a child of mixed race. Dora's father likewise appears to have his head in the sand when it comes to the idea of white and black South Africans mixing together or forming personal relationships with one another. He calls Salome a liar when she suggests that Davie is the father of her child.

There is also an outside influence in the story which is interesting. Meneer believes it to be appropriate to tell others in authority that Dora is in a mixed race relationship. Though the reader knows that Meneer is driven by bitterness. Having been rejected by Dora. It is also interesting that the headmaster refuses to take the matter further and rightly considers that there is no necessity for anyone to know that Dora is seeing Mike. However despite the headmaster's inclination to remain quiet matters come to a head when everybody discovers that Dora is in a relationship with Mike. It is as though Dora is being defined by her relationship with Mike and the fact that he is black. Though it is interesting that Dora remains defiant and does not care that others know she is in love with Mike. This may be important as Themba may be using Dora's character as a device to separate Dora from others. To have her not live her life in fear of the consequences of what might happen because she has broken the
